TERRAZZA

The Italian art of living is celebrated around the world. At the heart of this tradition, gastronomy holds a special place, where the pleasure of good food goes hand in hand with sharing, conversation, and taking the time to savour each moment.

Wine naturally plays an essential role, accompanying moments of conviviality and extending the pleasure of the table.

Below, you will find an introduction to some of Italy's most emblematic grape varieties, which, over time, have helped showcase the country's distinctive wine culture and expertise to the world.

Nebbiolo: Born in Piedmont centuries ago, Nebbiolo is the noble grape behind Barolo and Barbaresco. It is known for its complex aromas of red cherry, raspberry, rose petals, and violet, complemented by earthy notes of tar, dried herbs, and truffles. With high acidity, firm tannins, and remarkable aging potential, Nebbiolo expresses the elegance and depth of northern Italian winemaking.

Sangiovese: Originating in Tuscany long ago, Sangiovese is the grape behind iconic wines such as Chianti and Brunello di Montalcino. It is known for its vibrant aromas of sour cherry, red plum, and wild strawberry, complemented by floral notes of violet, tobacco, and earthy spices. Sangiovese reflects the rich winemaking heritage and diverse terroirs of Tuscany.

Nerello Mascalese: Native to the slopes of Mount Etna in Sicily, Nerello Mascalese has been cultivated for centuries in volcanic soils. Elegant and mineral, it reveals notes of red berries, spices, and earthy aromas, expressing the unique character of its volcanic terroir.

Vermentino: Rooted in Italy's coastal regions, particularly Sardinia and Liguria, Vermentino has a long Mediterranean heritage. Fresh and vibrant, it reveals notes of citrus, white flowers, and sea breeze, capturing the essence of Italy's coastal landscapes and Mediterranean character.
